

Javelin scored a short film video for "Canyon Candy" which premiered earlier this week at NYC's Clocktower Gallery. For those of us not in attendance, read the gallery's description of this elaborate exhibit:

"Beginning with an entrance through a wind-washed cabin, followed by a winding walk in the canyon's termite hills and cactus fields, visitors will encounter coyotes, campsites, big sky, and vignette sequences from the film. All paths lead to a saloon-style theater space featuring the full 16-minute Canyon Candy film – the ideal cowboy den after a long walk through the canyon, complete with strawbale seating, gingham tablecloths, and sasparilla."

If the Coen Brothers remake of True Grit left you thirsty for more modern western redux, then Mike Anderson's film adaptation of the aforementioned Javelin track will be an answer to your holiday wishes.

